WASHINGTON'S GARDENS COSTLY

War Crops in Capital Are Planted on Land Worth Millions.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 1.—Washington at the present time probably has the most extensive vegetable gardens in the world. To the multitude this may seem unreasonable, but it is not so. And the reason lies with the committee in charge of the "war garden" movement.

On Land Worth A Million. One of the gardens—probably the most extensive in the lot—is situated on Capitol Circle, in the center of the city. It is bounded by the Capitol building on the north, the Supreme Court building on the east, the Treasury department on the south, and the War department on the west. It is a beautiful garden, with many paths and a large fountain in the center. It is a garden of the future, and it is a garden of the present.

Costliest Land in City. The garden is situated on the most valuable land in the city. It is a garden of the future, and it is a garden of the present. It is a garden of the future, and it is a garden of the present. It is a garden of the future, and it is a garden of the present.

Necks Stretch When White Bag With Billy and Gun Hit the Desk No "rubberneck" wagon ever gave a better exhibition of the craning of necks than took place Friday afternoon in the police court when a complaining witness produced a white bag containing something mysterious and heavy, and dramatically dropped it upon Judge Charles Pollock's desk with a thud.
